USDA Processing Bottlenecks

USDA Processing Bottlenecks

USDA Certification: Complicated, lengthy, and expensive processes keep small-scale producers at a disadvantage.

Regulations: Restrictive laws favor large corporations and make it difficult for independent ranchers to compete.

Monopolies: A handful of companies control the vast majority of meat processing, leading to reduced competition.

CAFOs: Concentrated animal feeding operations dominate the industry, leaving small-scale, sustainable farms with fewer opportunities.

The PRIME Act H.R. 2814

"It is time to open our markets to give producers the freedom to succeed and consumers the freedom to choose."

- Rep. Thomas Massie (R-Kentucky)

"This bill will address the needs of communities in a way that supports them by allowing America's family farms to do what they do best – feed their neighbors."

- Rep. Chellie Pingree (D-Maine)

The PRIME Act H.R. 2814

Support the PRIME Act, which empowers states to allow custom-slaughtered meat to be sold locally without restrictive federal regulations. This bill strengthens local food networks and ensures consumers can access fresh, local meat.
